

Who Is Malphas?

Posted on June 2, 2025 by Rhyan Hyroc

When your name becomes a ward, when your silence disarms enemies, and when your loyalty becomes a sealed gate, you have stepped into the realm of Malphas.

He does not come with loud force or fire. Malphas arrives in quiet architecture—in the construction of protection so complete, the attacker never finds a path. He is the one who watches from the iron tower, masked in crow-feathers, commanding strategy without noise and exposing betrayal without words.

Malphas is the 39th spirit of the Ars Goetia, bearing the rank of President, and he commands forty legions of spirits. His dominion is precise, loyal, and structurally formidable. Where others influence, Malphas fortifies. Where others punish, he prevents. His presence is not theatrical—it is functional, overwhelming, and exact.

He is summoned when an individual seeks to build a life that cannot be breached by manipulation, espionage, psychic attack, or disloyalty. He is called upon by those who do not merely want to react to danger—but who wish to render it powerless.

The Mask of the Crow

Malphas often appears in visions or spiritual transmissions with the head of a raven or crow. In some accounts, he is described as a great crow speaking in a deep and intelligent voice. In others, he reveals himself cloaked in black, hooded, masked in feathers and shadows.

The crow is not random. It is a symbol of intelligence, foresight, and the balance between construction and deconstruction. Malphas, like the crow, is aware of what must be destroyed in order for strong foundations to be built. He is not merely a builder—he is the strategist, the one who understands that walls are not only protection—they are statements of boundaries.

Where there is confusion, Malphas designs. Where there is betrayal, he reveals. Where there is infiltration, he intervenes with silent architecture that leaves no doorway open to malice.

The President of Fortresses

In the Goetic hierarchy, the title of “President” is not decorative. It denotes a commander of systemic order, intelligence, and constructive force. Malphas’s legions are not those of rage or chaos—they are engineers, architects, and warders of sacred psychic spaces.

His command is centered on:

- Energetic defense
- Psychic filtration
- Exposure of deceit
- Loyalty architecture
- Unbreachable spiritual zones

Those who work with Malphas are not consumed with vengeance. They are students of containment, practitioners of clarity, and guardians of inner sanctity.

Why Malphas Answers the Call

Malphas is not a demon who seeks attention, sacrifice, or praise. He responds to readiness.

He answers the call when:

- A seeker is prepared to take full responsibility for their energetic hygiene

- A practitioner has suffered psychic or emotional invasion and seeks realignment
- An individual wishes to evolve from reactive defense to proactive sovereignty
- A leader must establish loyalty in a group, community, or coven
- A solitary practitioner wants to shield their workings, dreams, or home from interference

He does not tolerate spiritual laziness or inconsistent discipline. The Malphas current responds to those who act with silence, focus, and integrity.

Manifestations and Signatures

When Malphas is near or active in your field, you may notice:

- Sudden clarity about the motives of those around you
- Dreams revealing betrayals, hidden thoughts, or broken oaths
- The feeling of being “sealed off” or protected even in vulnerable moments
- The physical sensation of a barrier or shield descending over you during meditation or ritual
- The presence of crows or black birds at liminal moments—before decisions, conversations, or confrontations

His energy can feel dense, like iron pressed into the edges of your field. But it does not suffocate—it structures. It allows no distractions. It strengthens your spiritual boundaries so that clarity becomes your default.

The Presence of Strategic Silence

Above all, Malphas represents a principle that few explore: silence as power.

With Malphas, there is no performance. No boasting. No loud commands.

Instead, the initiate learns to become like a fortified structure—still, unshakable, aware of every opening, and aware of how to close it.

To call Malphas is to call clarity over paranoia, defense over drama, loyalty over flattery, and fortification over revenge.

A Spirit for the Current Age

In an era of exposure, psychic intrusion, spiritual vulnerability, and energetic confusion, Malphas offers not fantasy—but structure. Not illusion—but clarity. Not emotional reactions—but strategic calm.

He does not promise you will never be attacked.
He ensures you will never be unprepared.

This is Malphas. The masked architect. The President of strongholds. The revealer of traitors. The one who builds what must not be broken.