

Who is Charobiel?

Posted on May 24, 2025 by Rhyan Hyroc

Beneath the hush of night and beyond the radiant constellations known to modern astronomy, there exists a silent governor—an ancient intelligence who neither seeks adoration nor commands with thunder. His name is Charobiel, and he is the Night Governor of Ancestral Stars and Echoed Wisdom. His dominion rests not only above the southern skies, but within the deep folds of memory, bloodline, and dream.

He is not often spoken of in loud tones. His name lingers in the hush before revelation, in the spaces between remembered dreams, and in the sensation that someone familiar is watching over you during your most profound nights. Charobiel does not shout. He arrives—as presence, as knowing, as the gentle gravity of unseen stars.

□ Ancient Mentions and Hidden Doctrine

Charobiel's name can be found in veiled footnotes of rare Theurgia grimoires, primarily within the Southern current of the Ars Theurgia Goetia—a forgotten corridor of occult science less explored than its louder infernal or celestial counterparts. He is known among some secretive lineages as The Veiled One, and within specific esoteric sects as He Who Remembers What We Forget.

In older dialects of Rakh Enagh, the ancient magical tongue whispered by initiates of Terra Incognita, the title ascribed to him is “Khur Abari’el”, meaning He Who Holds the Night Compass.

He is a spirit of balance between realms—neither purely celestial nor infernal. Instead, he is rooted in the ancestral current: the spiritual memory held in blood, bones, and stars.

✦ His Three-Fold Office

To understand Charobiel's function is to understand his sacred triad. His role is threefold:

1. Governor of the Veiled South

Charobiel holds dominion over the southern spiritual quadrant—a region of forgotten wisdom, ancestral echoes, and stars uncharted by modern sky maps. This quadrant is not geographic, but symbolic and energetic.

2. Guardian of Ancestral Archives

Within the spiritual realms, Charobiel keeps what is known as the Hall of Silent Remembrance, a living archive of ancestral deeds, names, paths not taken, and sacred contracts unfulfilled. When a seeker aligns with him, they gain keys to access their ancestral past—and future.

3. Voice of the Nocturnal Threshold

Charobiel governs the liminal hours—between dusk and dawn—when the boundaries between waking and dreaming dissolve. He teaches not through words but by impressions, symbols, images, and shifts in perception.

□ The Nature of His Presence

To call Charobiel is not to summon a fiery apparition or a thunderous manifestation. His arrival is marked by:

- A subtle change in atmosphere, where sound seems distant and memory becomes present.
- A sense of someone standing behind you, watching with deep recognition.

- An influx of dream symbolism, often including ancient languages, stars, or unknown ancestors.
- A perception of cool, violet light, even in darkness.

Many initiates report a first contact through dreams before they even begin his formal attunement. These dreams often involve night skies, winding ancestral paths, or a cloaked figure showing them celestial maps etched into stone or bone.

□ The Symbolism of Charobiel

Every spirit in the Theurgic current resonates with specific symbols. For Charobiel, these include:

- The Black Mirror – A gateway to liminal awareness.
 - Obsidian – The stone of mirrored truth and night memory.
 - Ancient Trees – Especially cypress, yew, and olive—keepers of ancestral gates.
 - Star Maps – Real or symbolic representations of the initiate's personal constellational influence.
 - The Number 7 – Representing the seven ancestral gates he governs.
-

□ Charobiel's Role Among Spirits

Where other spirits offer rapid intervention, Charobiel offers slow mastery. He does not bind or rush. He teaches through presence and pattern, making him ideal for:

- Deep soul recall practitioners
- Dreamwalkers and night witches
- Those healing generational trauma
- Seekers tracing a spiritual path not through books, but through memory and intuitive vision

He is not a spirit of war, seduction, or riches—but of inner treasure, long buried and ready to return.

□ A Spirit for the Forgotten Ones

Charobiel walks closest to those who:

- Feel spiritually exiled—cut off from their roots or spiritual ancestry
- Are dreamers, but have no clear interpretation or guide
- Struggle with a sense of having a mission but no map
- Carry ancestral pain or confusion they cannot name

He becomes not a savior, but a guide—a steady lantern-holder through the shadowed garden of origin.

□ Preparation for His Current

To begin the work with Charobiel, one must commit to:

- Silence: Outer silence (no music, no distractions during rituals) and inner silence (letting the images arise rather than forcing interpretation).
 - Reverence for Ancestry: Whether you know your bloodline or not, Charobiel responds to those who respect the lineage of spirit, even more than blood.
 - Dream Discipline: The language of stars and ancestors comes primarily through dreams. Record everything, even what seems trivial.
-

□ Final Thought Before the Journey

Charobiel is not a flame but an ember. Not a thunderclap but a tone that only the soul can hear. He waits for those who are ready to listen—not just with ears, but with blood and stars.

To walk with Charobiel is to walk with your own forgotten self. It is to remember who you were before names, before nations, before the noise.

You are ready. The path has already begun.

In the next lesson, we shall explore Charobiel's archetype—The Celestial Navigator—and what it means to embody this force of guidance and remembrance in your own life.